DID YOU KNOW.....

Did you know that the Church says there is no such thing as a Catholic divorce?

Yes, my friends, it's true, the Catholic Church does not recognize the civil decree of divorce as an end to a sacramental marriage; remember what God has joined together, no man may separate. Now you might be thinking, I know plenty of couples that are remarried in the Church and are allowed to partake in Holy Communion, so how can there be no divorce? The short answer is, they would have officially been granted a decree of nullity from their previous marriages. The decree of nullity, known as an annulment, is a declaration by a Church tribunal (a Catholic Church court) that a marriage thought to be valid according to Church law actually fell short of at least one of the essential elements required for a binding union. Thus, the marriage never existed, and both parties are free to participate in the sacraments, including marriage. The problem arises when a divorced Catholic without an annulment attempts marriage again. Any such marriage attempted outside the Church is not valid, so, if he lives with his new "spouse" as though they are married, he lives in a state of objective mortal sin and cannot attain absolution through confession or receive Communion as long as he or she chooses to remain in the current state. The wise thing to do in such a situation is to commit to abstinence until (if ever) his prior marriage is declared null and his current marriage is convalidated (blessed) by the Church. Then they can go to confession and resume going to Communion. Remember, God continues to offer us a path to His forgiveness and love; we just need the courage to start the journey. For more information, please contact your local parish office. Next week we will take a deeper dive into the sacrament of Baptism.

God Bless, Deacon Frank
